

Presidents and Chairmen

For the first 25 years the New York Philharmonic, organized as a cooperative society, was managed by the musicians themselves. From 1865 to 1909, the musicians chose a president who was not a member of the orchestra but rather a distinguished, music-loving member of New York society and great supporter of the Philharmonic. In 1909, the cooperative system was replaced by a Board of Directors which at first included musicians from the Orchestra. At this point the players became contracted workers of the society.
